

Nick Dunlop

Nick Dunlop is an experienced insurance broker, risk management expert, and climate risk consultant with a passion for creative problem-solving. Throughout his career, he has applied his core skills—listening to clients, developing tailored solutions, and crafting compelling narratives—to help businesses navigate complex risks. His ability to view challenges from different perspectives has been a driving force in his success.

As the world faces the growing risks of climate change, Nick believes the insurance industry has a critical role in helping society understand, manage, and mitigate these challenges. He advocates for a reframing of the industry's value proposition, demonstrating how insurers can actively support the transition to a low-carbon economy.

Nick has extensive experience working alongside senior executives, helping them align personal and corporate objectives. His eight years of participation at the World Economic Forum in Davos have enriched his leadership insights and global network. Additionally, he has co-developed and contributed to leadership programs for WEF Young Global Leaders and takes great pride in mentoring emerging talent.

As a former Master of the Worshipful Company of Insurers (WCI), Nick played a key role in advancing the organisation's charitable and educational initiatives while championing the insurance sector within financial services. He is also a long-standing board member of British American Business, supporting the vital trade relationship between the UK and the US.

In his role as a trustee of ISC Group, Nick is committed to fostering a more inclusive and dynamic insurance industry. He actively supports ISC Group's mission to build a global business network that enables women and businesses to shape the future of the re/insurance sector, where gender equity drives innovation and stronger business performance.

Nick's career has taken him across the US, Canada, and beyond, strengthening international partnerships and celebrating the connections that bind industries and communities together. His deep expertise, strategic mindset, and passion for collaboration continue to shape the industry's response to emerging risks and opportunities.
